

Personally, I am sick and tired of receiving "unknown" calls to my home. This particularly bothers me when I get these calls on Sundays, and in the evenings when I am having dinner with my family. If I do pick up these calls, which is not usual on my part, the people like to pressure you, and continue to bother you with their "pitch". I have a good example to share. I was home having dinner one evening, and a telemarketer called. I was not rude to the gentleman on the other end, however I told him that the time was not a good one. He then goes on to ask if he can call back, and he hadn't even announced whom he was representing for the call. I believe that business's that choose this method of sales are ignorant. To bother people at home, especially on weekends or after business hours is an irritant to the public, and should be made illegal. As for myself, I will continue to let the phone go unanswered when an "unknown" caller appears.
